ABSTRACT

A method of mid-level pattern recognition provides for a pose invariant Hough Transform by parameterizing pairs of points in a pattern with respect to at least two reference points, thereby providing a parameter table that is scale- and rotation-invariant. A corresponding inverse transform may be applied to test hypothesized matches in an image and a distance transform utilized to quantify the level of match.